A simple magazine is a colorful and glossy compilation of articles, photos and layout that shows different aspects of life. The themes contained in the magazines are as numerous as the topics in the world. From teens to fashion and beauty, from cars, sports, science, medicine or even objects that reach deep space, there is no shortage of subjects that can be written in magazines made for public reading and consumption. The word magazine comes from the Arabic word makhazin, which meant stock. Edward Cave coined the term magazine, publisher of Gentleman magazine in 1731. Then the magazines became warehouses of information that aroused interest among target readers and audiences. It's a warehouse because it not only represents one theme or perspective, it's diverse, with parts such as cover, features, as well as front and back books. Creative magazines have several original pages that outline articles, graphics, texts, photos and advertisements. Layouting articles and photos can get pretty messy, so it is imperative to hire professionals to get the job done. However, if you want to save by doing a layout of the magazine yourself rather than hiring professionals, then this article is designed to help you. Aside from the creative magazine templates presented on this site, pro tips on how to make magazines are also listed. 1. Think of a unique concept It is always important to stay ahead by offering new concepts and fresh ideas to your avid and potential readers. Creating a unique concept entails process and evaluation, so it's always best to gather concepts from your team. With a creative idea comes an advantage over other publishers. Having an advantage means that your magazine will be attractive to investors and advertisers. Both investors and advertisers will keep your pages alive. According to Statista, the American magazine industry will remain stable despite the effects of online alternatives. Advertisers such as L'oreal spent about $700 million on magazine ads last 2017, followed by Proctor and Gamble Co., Pfizer, Kraft Heinz and Louis Vuitton. If the major advertisers continue to back up the magazine industry through ads, it will continue to thrive in the future. 2. Write meaningful content to reading magazines. The content should be enjoyable for readers as a design. Therefore, writing articles for the entire magazine requires a whole team of editorial writers. Each topic should offer useful information to readers. Create a checklist of details and contents and check everything before printing. 3. Feature Best Photos It is a well-known fact that magazines demonstrate the best photography skills and concepts. Each photo, showing new content and style, makes the magazine exciting and sold. That's why conceptual photos that show fashion design, sports, food menus and can be obtained through photo shoots, photo walks, and snapshots. 4. Arrange everything and Sections organize general content and assign each topic to the section. The layout of the pages should be the same as the nature of the content, so consult with the creative director about the overall aesthetics of the printed magazine. Complete, edit and adjust everything then proceed to print magazines using high-quality paper stocks. Common Frequently Asked Questions This is an external page frame of each type of magazine that tries to draw public attention to some of the highlighted topics mentioned inside. Designing is a creative work by artists who place paintings of the subject and other information in a compact space. A wall magazine is a large space on the walls of the corridor or next to the ad board of the institution, which quickly attracts the attention of a passerby. Such journal materials contain articles, poems, drawings and other educational and informational or literary content of students and teachers. This content changes periodically. The tapes were a century-old channel of communication and information for the audience. It also serves as a tool for advertising as it helps to connect different sellers with their potential audience. By attracting messages, product or service descriptions and amusing facts, he tries to reach potential customers. A headline representing content added inside. An introductory abstract that justifies the headline. The basic text of the body or article. Subtitle to notify readers of the item before they start reading it. Bylines to tell about the author/with the article. Signature and graphics, for each article. The quotes avoid the rules of hierarchy to emphasize certain content. Avoiding the target audience when designing. Use different fonts and colors without making much sense. Too cluttered and lack of white space. Inconsistency and low-resolution images.
